deal with government

overview

From taxation and public policy to business and competition regulations to international trade, companies need to understand how to deal with all levels of government at home and in the foreign jurisdictions in which they operate. There are myriad government regulations to manage procurement, import and export, economic sanctions, competition, anti-corruption, and aboriginal law, among other areas – and keeping up with them can be a challenge.

To respond, companies can look to lawyers who have strong relationships with government decision makers and who understand how to collaborate with government to the benefit of their clients.

McMillan has extensive experience counseling companies on how to navigate domestic government regulations and those relating to cross-border and international trade. We work with clients across all industries to help them understand the impact that government regulations have on their businesses and how they can work with government to build mutually beneficial relationships.
